Not sure exactly which ramp she (he) is referring to but I correspond with these folks quite often. Worth the dialog if you have time this week or tell them I'm out until thurs and ill catch up to them.

Thank you for responding, We greatly appreciate it. My husband is still worried about not walking in what is the mean low tide area so we will not be making it to Cape Point. He does not want to cause any problems with having the buffers increased if we step in the wrong area or bother the birds or us arrested (we have jobs that an arrest would be the end of our local government positions). It is just my deal that I love hiking to that area anyway. I know it is a balancing act to try to protect the vast wildlife and us tourist that want to enjoy all that is here.

I did want to state THANK YOU for the all access ramp we found just South of Frisco. It will be great to be able to have easy access that will accomidate my mother so that she can get to the beach when we come down here next fall. Are there any other access like that on the seashore??

Again thank you for your time,
Jacque Gates

Yes, you can walk past the closure BELOW the mean low tide line.

Hello, I am trying to find out walking information to Cape Point, we parked at ramp 44 parking area and walked to the beach then south. We were stopped by signage that stated no access to all tides. All information stated pedestrians could walk to the point in the intertidal area. Please I know this is not important to you, but we are only here a limited time, and even hiking to that point was difficult for my husband. We would love to make it to Cape Point while we still can since we do not have 4 wheel drive and have to hike there. I would appreciate any help in this matter, as to the best way to access the point and not disturb the birds. Thank you Jacque
